Twelve years ago he was "Chasing Amy," but now it's Ben Affleck women are in hot pursuit of as their genetically ideal mate.

The semen of lookalikes of the actor, director and Oscar-winning screenwriter is one of the most popular at California Cryobank, said Scott Brown, spokesman for the national sperm bank with offices in Affleck's hometown of Cambridge.

Brown attributes Affleck's popularity among would-be moms to his believable boy-next-door good looks - a comfortable choice for women unable to conceive with their husbands.

Affleck, 37, has fathered two daughters with his wife, actress Jennifer Garner.

California Cryobank offers a veritable man menu of Bay State celebrity stand-ins, including alleged spitting images of Patriots [team stats] quarterback Tom Brady [stats], comic Denis Leary and Red Sox [team stats] infielder Dustin Pedroia [stats].

But while Tom is terrific - and a proven stud - Minnesota Vikings quarterback Brett Favre is the sperm bank's top-ranked athlete by ladies who want brawn with their beauty.

"George Clooney and Brad Pitt are always asked about, but we decided that unless a guy was a drop-dead ringer, they were off-limits," Brown said. "We call them the Holy Grail."
